InTown

IT HAS BEEN SAID THAT THE MARINE CORPS continues to exist because “the American public wants a Marine Corps.” The Corps gives back in return. Marines give their service in the global war on terror, operations around the world, humanitarian aid to those in need, assistance to nations on the verge of civil war, and countless other locations to help protect freedom. Marines give equally at home—intertwined in America. Off base, “in town” and throughout American communities, Marines and the Corps’ supporters devote themselves to service.

Baseball games, community events, retirement homes and local schools are only a few of the locations we have grown accustomed to finding Marines. They present flags to honor our nation, provide Marine bands to entertain, visit the elderly to remind them we care, and assist schools to support our teachers building a solid foundation for our children.

Motivation, as they say, is contagious. Beyond the front gates of the base, others join in the parade of community involvement. The Young Marines program devotes itself to helping children build character, teamwork and live a healthy lifestyle. The Marine Moms organization provides a way for others to connect so they can help inform and support their community. And the Toys for Tots program unites community members and Marines in a common cause to bring a message of hope and happiness to needy children.

No matter whether they are coordinating the Marine Corps marathon for thousands of runners or paying silent tribute to a fallen comrade, Marines understand their call to serve their town, community and nation. M

CENTRAL AFGHANISTAN – Sgt. Anthony Viggiani, 24, of Strongsville, Ohio, pauses after a fierce firefight with anti-coalition militia in central Afghanistan. Sometime during the fight, an enemy bullet fired by ACM fighters further up the valley, sliced through Viggiani’s lower left leg. Despite the wound, Viggiani continued to engage the enemy with rifle fire until the area was cleared and a total of one wounded and four dead enemy fighters were found. Viggiani is a squad leader in C Co., Battalion Landing Team 1st Bn., 6th Marines, the ground combat element of the 22nd Marine Expeditionary Unit (Special Operations Capable).
